Three top jobs at Sunday River are eliminated

As ASC announces 'program to boost skiing in Maine'

By MICHAEL DANIELS

The American Skiing Company on Tuesday eliminated three senior management positions at Sunday River Ski Resort.

ASC said the top management of Sunday River and Sugarloaf/USA, are being merged, as part of a program "to boost skiing in Maine."

In a prepared statement, ASC CEO B.J. Fair said: "We foresee significant opportunity to increase Maine's share of the New England ski market, and this integration will help achieve that goal."

The public statement made no mention of the job cuts at Sunday River.

Seamans, Harkins, Driscoll gone

However, company officials confirmed for The Citizen Wednesday, that as a result of the merger, the jobs of Chip Seamans, Sunday River managing director; Bob Harkins, vice president for resort services; and George Driscoll, marketing director, had been eliminated.

No jobs were cut at Sugarloaf as a result of the merger, according to John Diller, who will now take over management of the two resorts. Diller was previously the managing director of Sugarloaf.

Tuesday's move comes less than two months after ASC announced it was moving its corporate headquarters from Newry to Park City, Utah.

And it marks the second time in little over a year that Sunday River has cut back on its staffing.

In May 2001 approximately 10 full-time, year-round employees were let go and others had their jobs converted to seasonal status.

Watershed survey finds new rivers running through old roadbeds

By ALISON ALOISIO

Old logging roads have become new rivers in some areas of the western Sunday River watershed, volunteers found in a recent erosion survey.

The concern, especially in a relatively steep valley like the Sunday River, is that sediment may be ending up in the river of the same name.

The volunteers with the Sunday River Watershed group gathered last week to share their results from a springtime survey in the upper valley.

One old logging road had been eroded eight to 10 feet deep and 25 feet wide, forming a large gully.

The erosion study is funded through a federal Clean Water Act grant, and is coordinated by Jeff Stern of the Oxford County Soil and Water Conservation District. A similar study was done two summers ago along the lower Sunday River watershed. It found bank erosion and new channeling, as well as erosion along town and other roads and parking areas. Some of the grant funds have since been used to aid in repairing the worst erosion damage.

Deep gully formed

This time around, old logging roads appeared to be the primary culprit causing damage away from

Hanover ponders moving library building

By ALISON ALOISIO

A proposal to move Hanover's 120-year-old Gardner Roberts Memorial Library building to the town office property is under consideration by selectmen.

The small structure, located on the Howard Pond Road, was built as a post office in 1884 by J. Gardner Roberts Jr.

It became a library in 1895, but in recent years has only been open by appointment. The library is located extremely close to a large house. Clem Worcester, Hanover's town clerk, said there are several reasons to move the library.

The owners of the adjacent home, he said, are concerned about the possible fire hazard. In addition, there is virtually no parking space available other than on the narrow road. The relatively new town office site on Route 2 offers ample parking and adequate space for the library building to the right of the office.

Located there, he said, the library might see more usage. He said it could be kept open during town

Public input sought on future of wildlife refuge

By MICHAEL DANIELS

A course is now being charted that for the next decade and a half will guide the management of the Lake Umbagog National Wildlife Refuge.

The refuge currently includes more than 16,300 acres of land straddling the Maine/New Hampshire border, on or near the shores of Lake Umbagog and the headwaters of the Androscoggin River.

The refuge was formed 10 years ago, with the mission of protecting the unique wetland habitats and wildlife associated with the Lake Umbagog region. The refuge also plays a major role in migratory bird conservation.

Now, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, which manages the refuge, has begun developing a "Comprehensive Conservation Plan" that is intended to guide the management of the refuge for the next 15 years.

The public is being invited to participate in developing the plan. A number of meetings have been scheduled for soliciting questions, comments and other input from all who are interested in the refuge.

Locally, there will be a meeting Friday, Aug. 2, at 6:30 p.m. in The Bethel Inn.

Among the areas the planning process will look at are hunting, fishing, environmental education, interpretation programs, wildlife observation, photography and remote camping.

Other topics will include how to manage multiple recreational activities on the refuge, the possible establishment of a trapping program, management of winter deer yards, and the refuge's re-

Lewiston H.S. assistant principal is selected for top spot at Telstar

By ALISON ALOISIO

Shawn Lambert, the assistant principal at Lewiston High School, was selected Monday as the new principal of Telstar high and middle schools.

"He was a very impressive candidate," said new SAD44 Supt. Dave Murphy, whom Lambert will replace as principal.

Lambert was approved by a 10-1 vote by the School Board, after directors interviewed four candidates Monday evening.

A Biddeford native and Colby College graduate, Lambert has been assistant principal at Lewiston for two years. He has also served as an English teacher and head of that department at the school.

In past year, Lambert has been assistant to principal Patrick

O'Neill, who was Telstar's principal for a year before taking that position in Lewiston.

Lambert has been in education a total of 10 years, also holding positions in Waterville and at Shedd High School. He currently lives in New Gloucester.

Murphy described him as "a rising star" in the education field.

Lambert will formally assume his new position Aug. 12. He was hired at a salary of $74,986, which was Murphy's salary as principal. Lambert's one-year contract will run through June of 2003.

Murphy said a total of 36 people applied for the principals. A search committee narrowed the field to seven. Murphy interviewed five of them, and brought four to the board for consideration.

Over the mountains and through the woods, to find town lines he goes

By REBECCA ZICARELLI

Tom Wheeler spends a lot of time studying the lines on maps. He spends a lot more time trying to translate those lines into clearly marked lines in the woods.

Wheeler retired from the United States Forest Service (USFS) in 1994. Prior to retiring he administered timber sales in the White Mountain National Forest. Since '95, he has marked property lines and town lines.

The primary tool of the trade is a $39 axe, a paint gun, and boundary-marking paint.

Of course, the skill to read a compass and a USGS map, with all its arcane markings, helps.

But for markers buried in duff, for corner posts lost in the deep woods and lines run where iron deposits pull a compass needle off course, patience becomes a prerequisite.

For lines that run miles from the nearest logging road, skid trail, or ATV trail, stamina and determination come in handy, as well.

Sometimes, a line is well marked and easy to follow, with markers placed near good roads. But, frequently, Wheeler has found things don't work out so easily.

Tangled boundaries

A good example of that is the line between Bethel and Newry, which Wheeler helped Gary Inman survey a few years ago.

Originally, Wheeler said, the line had been run with a compass. But iron deposits in the mountains would bring the line off course, by as much as 280 feet in some places.

"It created legal problems. If your deed says 'to the town line,' and the town line moved, where do you

WHAT'S THE DEAL?

To the Editor:

I'm confused about the "deal" to straighten Telstar's pipeline problem reported on page one of The Citizen's July 25 issue. Maybe someone can explain it to me.

When the voters of the five towns making up SAD44 agreed to raise the money necessary to run water and sewer lines to the Telstar complex, I don't remember any mention of providing infrastructure to Bethel taxpayers along the line. Now we hear that the project will include a sewer line running to a large tract of land owned by a Bethel business.

The land is currently being cleared, leveled, and prepared for "something." We also notice that fire hydrants have been installed at regular intervals along the water main to benefit homes and businesses along Route 26.

Now I agree that taking advantage of the new public works to improve the neighborhoods they pass is a good thing. My problem is that the cost of the project is being borne by the taxpayers in five towns who are assessed based on their relative property valuation. In Newry's case, for instance, the town will pay for 35 percent of the project. I believe that Bethel will pay on the order of 33 percent.

I also question the engineering decision that placed the sewer pressure pump at Telstar, rather than at Alder Brook, thereby making attachment by homes and businesses on Route 26, Bailey Road, Sunset Road, and Forest Road impossible? Shouldn't we think about ways to benefit all the property owners in the area with new infrastructure rather than only one? (All at their own expense, of course.)

BAND-AID FIX IN AUGUSTA

To the Editor:

I enjoyed reading the front-page article in the Sun-Journal that compared the current state budget "shortfall" at the end of Governor King's second term to the shortfall in 1991 at the beginning of Governor McKernan's second term. Yes it is déjà vu, "all over again." Will the current governor and Legislature do what is right and what must be done? Not a chance.

They will, once again, apply a band-aid "fix" to a systemic problem that will satisfy no one. Expect across-the-board cuts that hurt all programs without regard to priority and never raise the question, "is this program even needed and if it is, could it be done in the private sector or in a public/private partnership at less cost to the taxpayer?" We will experience shutdown days for government and furlough days for state workers, old gimmicks from the past.

The special interest groups will gather in Augusta like sharks in a feeding frenzy and they will have their say at the expense of the taxpayers. This systemic problem is easy to outline: Maine is one of the highest taxing states in the country, yet we are one of the lowest in per capita income. Anyone running for office in Maine should understand this, and if they don't, they should not be elected.

Can we turn this situation around? Yes, but only if all of us hold every candidate accountable, and by not voting for anyone who does not pledge to vote against any tax increases. The candidate must promise to overhaul the entire system so that it is fair for all and will promote a strong and healthy business climate and economy. We all have to realize that we all cannot have everything that everyone wants provided by state government. Individual initiative and responsibility must be encouraged by government so that each of us can have the opportunity to succeed on our own.

I hope this letter will inspire others to continue this dialogue and, just maybe, we can get something done.

LOATHSOME TIMING

To the Editor:

We are writing on behalf of the Massachusetts relatives of Matthew Collins with regard to the story written by Alison Aloisio, "renegade" ATV riders that appeared in your newspaper on the front page below the picture of the memorial set up by Matt's friends. It was disturbing, untimely, insensitive, and a cold decision on your part to run this article directly below the memorial picture.

The death of a loved one, especially someone so young, so loved and so very special as Matt, is the most devastating emotional hurt anybody could ever live through. How his parents, sister and brother will ever cope, no one knows.

Your bad judgment allowing this story to run has distilled in us a very bitter and angry emotion not to mention the disgust and hurt felt, especially by Matt's parents and siblings. How your paper could show such disregard and disrespect for the death of someone's son, brother, grandson, nephew, friend is beyond belief. Your paper presented a very uncaring, callous picture of the people of Maine.

The article implies that anyone driving an ATV should be considered a renegade operator with parents that don't care. That is so far from the truth, there are 46,000 registered operators in Maine alone. We all agree that something should be done to regulate and standardize trails and the use of ATVs, but your timing was loathsome.

It was astonishing and heartwarming to receive the support of their friends, neighbors and town folks during this tragic time. This outpouring of affection and love will help all of us carry on. This, we believe, is what Maine is all about.

THE LAST DAY AT THE MILL

To the Editor:

That day came, as I knew it would. I could not imagine why it had taken so long, even though it had been only a couple of months. Actually, the real end had been in sight for years. And the years of knowing seemed like a cancer inside me that I had no control over. No treatments were available. It seemed like it dragged us down; our spirits, minds, and wills grew weaker every day.

Work, an awful word, but one we all knew. We had made it our second home. It was a place to go where people knew and cared about you. Now it is going to end.

Finally, the day was there for me; my turn to end it, to stop the cancer inside from growing. It was time to cast it aside. Like all the crazy things I gave up as a child to become a grownup. It seemed odd to me, that day, I mean, I thought I would wake up with a feeling of regret, as if there had actually been a way for me to have fixed it or changed anything. I got up and dressed as if it were any other day. In my mind I knew I would never do this very thing again. Get up and go to work, not there anyway with the same people, my friends, my family.

That morning when I arrived nothing was different at all. Everyone was sitting in their usual places talking about the usual old things. Who went where, what had happened, and what was going to happen according to God knows whom. I just wanted the day to start. I wanted to go out back in my own department. I really just wanted to be left alone. I thought that was a strange reaction for anyone to have, but that was mine even if I couldn't figure out why.

I tried really hard to make the day pass as fast as I could work it to death, so to speak. Then two o'clock came — my last break. Still I felt nothing. No one let on it was almost the end. I got back to my workstation. Then it began; my friends, people I loved and knew for years, came to tell me goodbye. I was sad, but not the way I thought I would be. I wanted to be angry; how dare they end my way of life and stop everything I had become accustomed to. Instead, all I could think of is what will they do without this place. Each and every one of them crossed my mind, and I began to think how it would affect them. What about one couple? Would they be all right without insurance? And another man, at 60 would he be able to find work? What a wonderful man with a heart of gold, one who went on school field trips with his grandchildren. Each person there filled my mind, and I wanted to cry, not for myself but for them. In my own heart I knew I would be fine. I don't know how I knew it but I did.

It's 3:30. It's over and I'm standing at the time clock punching out for the last time. I can't bear to look at anyone. I just said, "You guys take it easy and I'll see you all later." What a queer thing to say, but for a lack of anything better that was all I could think of.

I'm crossing the bridge and of all the unexplainable things I had thought or felt that day the strangest of them all hit me. I almost had to look around to see if it was really me thinking those thoughts; I was relieved, I felt as though a weight the size of the moon was lifted off my shoulders. I could breathe. For the first time in months I almost felt giddy. I sat in my car for a few seconds and started it up, and as I drove away I never looked back, and one single thought entered my head. Today, I will begin to live my life. No more wishing it away hoping for Friday and having it come only to realize that months and years have passed me by. A life, a real one just for me to do whatever I could dream. Just to think — whatever I could dream.

REMEMBERING BETTY PERKINS

To the Editor:

I was saddened to learn of the death of Lillian (Betty) Perkins this week. She was a valued Bethel Historical Society member for many years, most memorably with her late husband, Ernest (Perk), in portraying Doctor and Mrs. Mason at society events. Beginning in 1980 when we started the annual Dr. Mason Birthday Party, she rarely missed an opportunity to dress the part of Agnes Straw Mason and be the gracious hostess at the Mason House. She also took a great interest in the society and was always willing to help wherever she could. We could usually count on her attendance at most society events and programs. It was good to have her with us at this spring's White Mountain Sampler course, where she seemed to enjoy herself so much. I will miss seeing her at future activities, but will always know that she will be with us in spirit as a most faithful and enthusiastic member who loved the society and served it so well over the years.

REMEMBERING 'PETE' THROOP, DONALD B. EDDY AND MELLEN KIMBALL

To the Editor:

For the past several weeks, I have been attempting to write something about the late William M. "Pete" Throop Jr., but time constraints have interfered with my being able to do so. It would be a pity to let his death go unnoticed locally as he was a remarkable figure in being such a strong supporter of projects relating to the greater Bethel area.

I first met him in the mid-1970s when I became associated professionally with the Bethel Historical Society. A member of the New York law firm, Davidson, Dawson & Clark, he accompanied the late Sidney W. Davidson on a tour of the Dr. Moses Mason House. As some readers may know, Dr. Davidson was instrumental in the restoration of the Dr. Mason House. Prior to taking the society position, I must confess that I had always held the opinion that Dr. Davidson was a rather forbidding figure, but once I got to know him, it was clear that he really loved Bethel and Gould Academy. In fact, I received over the years several very warm and supportive letters from him. Pete Throop was a member of his law firm and the key figure on the Bingham Betterment Fund while Sidney, who had been William Bingham II's attorney, was the prime presence on the Bingham Trust for Charity.

In any case, Pete Throop struck me then and for the next quarter century as one of the finest people I have had the privilege of knowing. He was interested in so many things, asked lots of questions because he was genuinely concerned, and could always be counted upon for honesty and forthrightness in his observations. He joined the society in 1975, but became a life member in 1980 following his attendance at one of our meetings where the late Albert Skillings rose and talked about the use of some of the farming tools that were on exhibit for that meeting. Pete found Albert a real "treasure" as all of us who had come to know him had already determined. Throughout the years, we could count on Pete and the Bingham Betterment Fund to assist us in publishing books and helping to fund the capital campaign. During my years as a trustee of Gould, I found my admiration for Pete increased markedly. He always appeared wise and well informed, never pompous or pretentious. He wore his Ivy League background comfortably concealed beneath an authentic concern for others and the fervent desire to determine what practical good could be done for noble causes. When he retired from the Gould Board of Trustees, he thanked the "locals" for "putting up with" him as he was the consummate gentleman, always modest but effective in his language and demeanor. The last time I saw him was perhaps a year ago when he was walking down Broad Street as I was coming out my driveway. He called out to me and we had a good chat of twenty minutes or so. He wanted to know what was happening locally and was curious about many things. It was always a pleasure to talk with him, as his insights and comments were unusually perceptive and precise. I will miss seeing him very much since he was one of those special people who seemed to bring out the best in all who came to know him.

Since Pete's death, two more people have passed from the scene that deserve some recognition. Donald B. Eddy was for many years a "stalwart" of the Bethel Historical Society, serving on several committees and as a trustee. He and his wife, Edith, were very helpful to the organization and I will be eternally grateful to them for all their support and assistance in that very crucial stage of the society's history.

The death this week of C. Mellen Kimball brings to an end a life of service to others. He was a contemporary of my father's, growing up in the same East Bethel neighborhood. They were lifelong friends and his death means that era has passed. Countless people depended on Mellen to fix whatever plumbing or appliance needed servicing. Always genial and friendly, he took pride in his work and appeared to enjoy serving the public so well for so many years.

I have indeed been lucky to have known all three of these individuals. They have served as fine examples throughout my adult life. I have learned much from them and trust I am the better person because of them.

the riverbanks themselves. Most of the half dozen survey groups reported such damage in their respective survey areas.

Many of the roads were built 30 years ago, complete with culverts and water bars, but were never maintained after logging operations in the area ceased.

In the area of Locke Hill, for example, a group found an old road that had been eroded eight to 10 feet deep and 25 feet wide, forming a large gully.

And along another old road near Jake's Notch, "The culverts were filled in and silted up," said Stern. "The water had first run down the shoulders of the road, then down the middle of it." The road had become a stream channel that looked like it could be on its way to becoming another gully, he said.

Several groups also reported some erosion from ATV and mountain bike use.

Along the Sunday River itself, volunteers found, as they had in the lower valley, that the river is undercutting its own banks and finding new channels.

Near the Newry/Riley line, surveyors found long stretches of bank erosion, stretching for 1,000 to 1,500 feet. Trees hung over the bank, ready to fall with a strong wind.

Stern said that area, which is more gently sloped, may now be functioning as a settling basin in sediments carried down from above.

Other volunteers said they believe the upper valley receives more rainfall than areas nearer Bethel. Some suggested an organized monitoring of rainfall in the upper valley, perhaps in the form of a "weather station."

Stern said a total of 90 to 100 erosion sites had been found in this most recent survey. The earlier one found 181 sites.

He plans to complete surveys this fall in the areas not covered by the volunteers, and hopes to have a final survey report ready in the winter. Restoration projects, with cost-sharing among landowners, towns and the grant funds, will continue through 2004, Stern said.

Further, more technical survey work is expected next summer, funded by a separate $5,000 grant from Trout Unlimited. Measurements to determine river flow volumes and patterns will be taken, again by volunteers, supervised by an expert in river dynamics.

The grant is part of TU's Embraze-A-Stream program. The funds were approved this spring, after application was made with assistance from the local Molycott TU Chapter.

Town lines

own to? Some people suddenly had to start paying taxes in Bethel or Newry, where they'd never had to pay before."

Wheeler discovered one town line, the boundary between Greenwood and Albany, had been marked incorrectly. The corner of Greenwood, Albany, and Norway lies in Furlong Pond. From the corner, the line passes over Long Mountain, north to the corner of Greenwood, Bethel, and Albany.

Wheeler was able to find the line on either side of the mountain. But he couldn't find any trace of the line over the cliff at its summit. Finally, he realized it had never been marked.

"They ran the line 10 degrees north, 10 degrees east from the corner of Bethel, Greenwood, and Albany," Wheeler said. "But they ran it 14 degrees south, 14 degrees west from the corner of Norway, Greenwood, and Albany. The two would never have met."

The towns and the county agreed to a diagonal line connecting the two lines across the summit. Luckily, the land on either side belonged to a single landowner, so there were no property-line disputes involved.

"Now, it's an official line," Wheeler said. "Otherwise, it would have been expensive; they would have had to survey it."

Local lore

Those exceptions aside, Wheeler said he marvels at how well the old lines were marked. Most are straight lines. Some are the old range and lot lines, which divided the land into grants. (King George used to give these land grants out as rewards to subjects who served him well.) Range and lot lines and most town lines were drawn on maps with rulers. There was no consideration of the actual topography on the ground.

It took the first settlers months of labor building stonewalls in the woods to secure a grant and mark the bounds of a parcel such as Sudbury Canada, the initial grant that included Bethel. This was done while settlers undertook the serious work of clearing land, digging cellar holes, and eking out a living from the bony soil.

"I'm amazed at how straight they got them," Wheeler said.

Finding those straight lines, and making them easy to see again, is no easy task.

Wheeler studies maps, looking for logging roads, skid trails, hiking trails, or ATV trails that will get him close. Once he's located the line, he'll mark it in either direction. Often, the work takes him through swamps, over steep ledges, through thickets of pucker brush.

Local lore can be invaluable. Wheeler talks to the people who own land and live near the lines he's marking. Often, they'll know about an ATV trail or road that doesn't show on the maps.

Sometimes, they'll tell him they know just where the line or corner he's looking for is located.

'It took the first settlers months of labor building stonewalls in the woods to secure a grant and mark the bounds of a parcel such as Sudbury Canada, the initial grant that included Bethel.'

"It can be deceiving," he said. "They think they know, but sometimes they don't."

A corner of the Norway and Albany boundary is marked with a pin, described as being 30 feet from a stonewall.

"I stumbled around in there for a few days," Wheeler said. "Finally, I found the pin buried in the duff. It was not 30 feet from a stonewall, it was 15 feet off the end of the wall, and I'd been looking in the wrong place."

Mom and Pop trees

Sometimes, the lines pass through neighborhoods, and go through people's yards. One, the line between Bethel and Greenwood, goes right through the house near the intersection of Route 26 and the East Bethel Road.

But more often, boundaries are in wild places, far from homes and roads. Wheeler knows it wasn't always that way. The surrounding hills, now deep forest, were once farms. Wheeler welcomes the opportunity to study the abandoned homesteads he encounters. Usually, there's nothing but cellar holes and trees.

"What's interesting is where they put buildings," he said. "where they put barns as opposed to houses, where the wells were. They did it without the knowledge we have today, just plain old common sense. There are a lot of things that in the old days were common sense that we've forgotten."

He still finds the Mom and Pop trees, those trees planted on the south side of a house for summer shade.

"Some (home sites) amaze me," Wheeler said. "They're not necessarily flat, but if you study it, you'll see it's the best place as far as a well and sewage. Once in a while they goofed, and you'll see where drainage from the barn ran through the front or back yard."

The technological future

Thus far, he's worked on lines between Bethel and Greenwood, Bethel and Albany, Greenwood and Albany, and Greenwood and Norway. He's done it all the old fashioned way — slogging through swamps and scaling cliffs, searching for clues guided by a map and compass.

He recently began working on the line between Milton and Rumford. It's rugged country, without a lot of access. "I get tired easily," he says, as he looks at the bluffs he'll have to cross on the USGS maps. The lines that show a 20-foot gain in altitude are awfully close together.

Following the line last week, he found some of it marked with barbed wire; he caught on it and tore his pants. Barbed wire, an old-fashioned way of marking lines, is a pointed reminder of just how rough it can be out there.

But the future is here. Wheeler has a GPS and computer, and he's thinking about learning to use them. Local forester Don Feeney has shown him some things, his grandson others.

Maybe technology can help alleviate some of the wandering, help him plot a sure course through rugged territory. As Wheeler looks for pins, barbed wire, faded paint, and blazes on trees that have long since fallen down, any help, from a nearby ATV trail to a piece of high-tech magic, is appreciated.

The Way I See It

by Sharon Bouchard

Sharon Bouchard's column is published by special arrangement with the Advertising Department of this newspaper.

One of my fondest memories of when I was a little kid is when my mother would take me up to an ice cream on Saturday afternoon. Admittedly that was many years ago, though much more recent than the horse and buggy days as my kids seem to think. It was a much simpler time, at least for me.

I came from the era of the soda fountain which was a delightful experience that I'm afraid is lost on the youngsters of today. I imagine if you mention soda fountain to a kid now, they would immediately conjure up an image of a municipal fountain spouting Pepsi or Coke.

But in my day it was a counter with high stools and behind the counter there were tall black and chrome spigots for dispensing soda and sweet syrups, a lot of stainless steel and always a huge mirror on the wall. In those older days we didn't know much about high fat and cholesterol and could look ourselves right in the eye while we consumed the artery clogging sweetness.

Maybe it's because of the mirrors that soda fountains have become a thing of the past. People still eat large volumes of high fat, high cholesterol ice cream, but we all know it's not very good for us and we sure don't want to see ourselves packing it away.

Anyway, I was talking about a fond memory of going to a soda fountain with my mother and in Norway, where I was raised, we had several to choose from. If it was just ice cream we were after, we went to Ashton's Drug Store or Fletcher's. If there was a need to combine shopping with our mission we got the ice cream at Newberry's or Stone's Drug Store. Once in a great while we would end up at Barjo's Restaurant or venture all the way down to the other end of Main Street to Harlow's.

For all the options of where to buy ice cream there were not that many choices on what kind of ice cream to buy. The menus consisted of vanilla, chocolate, strawberry, coffee, and fudge ripple, sometimes pistachio and at Barjo's, my personal favorite, banana. All hard serve, no low fat.

I always chose fudge ripple unless we went to Barjo's, then, of course, it was banana. I was a bit of a rebel and didn't want to fall into the vanilla, chocolate, strawberry mold. Although that was way too common. My mother always ordered vanilla.

Later, when I was old enough to ride a bicycle, Lyndon Spinney had opened Dairy Joy and introduced the area to soft serve. I thought I was a big shot to pedal my bike there and get something different.

The flavors were vanilla, chocolate, vanilla and chocolate twist and sometimes strawberry and coffee. I always chose the twist.

Now, everything has changed. The soda fountain and Dairy Joy are long gone replaced by seasonal ice cream stands. The menus are vast and the flavor options are endless. When I go to one of these ice cream stands it takes me at least a half hour of standing in the hot sun just to decide what I want.

There is hard serve, soft serve, frozen yogurt, frozen custard, sherbet, Dole whip, low fat, no fat and reduced cholesterol. There are anywhere from 20 to 30 flavors of hard serve, several options for soft serve and at some of the stands there is a sign boasting 24 different flavors that can be added to soft serve.

Mind boggling, isn't it? And it doesn't stop there. The consumers have a choice of cones too; regular, waffle or sugar cones and at some stands that choice expands to chocolate covered cones or chocolate and nut covered cones. If you can't make up your mind which cone you want, you can always have your ice cream in a dish.

Then you can add the choice of chocolate sprinkles (we used to call them Jimmies) or colored sprinkles. If that's not enough you can have several different types of candy mixed into your ice cream or you can mix your ice cream in with your favorite flavor slush.

On top of all those options there are the old standbys like sundaes (several to choose from), parfaits (several to choose from), milk shakes (any flavor you can create) and good old banana splits.

Author's note: Many thanks to Pat Coffin for the ice cream idea.

Buying your ice cream in the supermarket isn't a whole lot easier. There you will find several brand names, many flavors, premium, gourmet, low fat, no fat, in-between fat, Italian ice, and ice milk. I won't even bother to go into the ice cream desserts, ice cream bars, sandwiches and a whole slew of other frozen concoctions.

Is it any wonder that ice cream is an $11 billion retail industry? To put that into a different perspective, each American consumes a yearly average of 23.2 quarts of ice cream, ice milk, soft serve and other commercially produced frozen dairy products.

Considering that 98% of all households in America purchase ice cream, I would guess that some of us are consuming a little more than our 23.2 quarts a year.

It's probably not too hard to figure out that the United States ranks number one in the top 10 ice cream consuming countries in the world. It may surprise you though, that the next 9 in order of top consumption are New Zealand, Denmark, Australia, Belgium, Sweden, Canada, Norway (the country, not where I grew up) Ireland and Switzerland.

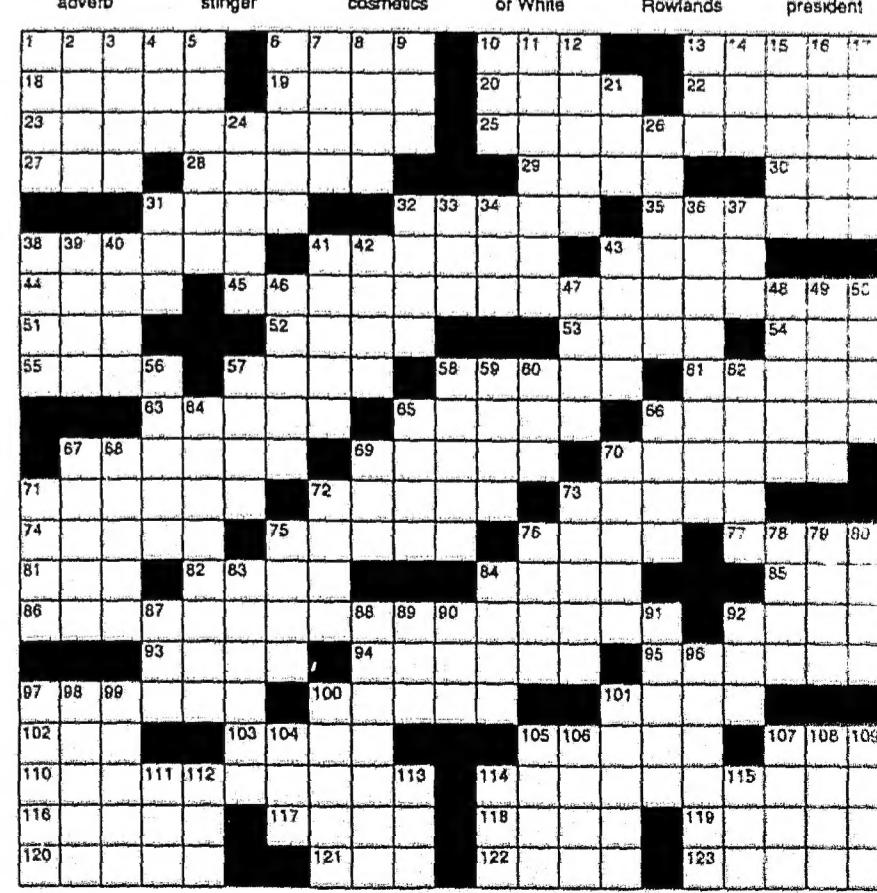

A couple of other interesting ice cream facts are children ages 2 thru 12 and adults 45 and over eat the most ice cream per person. The top three cities in America that purchase the most ice cream on a per capita basis are Portland, Oregon, St. Louis, Missouri and Seattle, Washington.

And believe it or not, the average number of licks it takes to polish off a single scoop ice cream cone is approximately 50. Here is the most interesting fact of all, in spite of all the choices of ice cream available, vanilla is still the world's favorite.

So no matter what your favorite flavor, choice of cone, what you mix in or don't mix in, or how many licks it takes you to eat an ice cream cone, just keep consuming that ice cream. The way I see it we should all do our duty and eat at least 23.2 quarts of ice cream this year so we can make sure this great country of ours will remain #1.

An auto collision on Main Street near the intersection with the Howard Pond Road sent one driver to the hospital and tied up traffic for several hours. Rumford Fire Department, Med-Care Ambulance and the Maine State Police were called to the Tuesday morning incident. The injured driver was treated and released at the Rumford Hospital. The other driver did not seek medical attention.

physical training or their cleanup details after every meal.

CAP recently updated their training syllabus to align it more closely with the training of other search and rescue organizations nationwide. There is now extensive training in navigation with maps and compass, conducting search operations in various different types of terrain, locating emergency locator beacons, first aid and using all the other required equipment, working with other search and emergency response organizations and numerous other subjects.

One of our first practical problems was to navigate to and locate red painted steel posts in the woods using only a compass and pacing off the distances. Our instructor gave each of us just five minutes to study his map, measure a bearing and distance from one post to another; then he took back the map and the designated "navigator" was required to lead the group to the next post. Just after beginning our second navigation problem, I noticed that we were all strolling through a large patch of poison ivy, about knee deep. I alerted the other nine folks in the group, and only three broke out with poison ivy welts.

After several hours of daylight problems, we hiked a short distance to a stand of hemlock trees and set up camp. Then it was time to prepare for night navigation. After dark, we spent a couple more hours practicing that skill. The procedures are similar to those for daytime navigation, but I am convinced that the probability of finding a non-responsive target at night is slim. In most cases, it is probably smarter to wait for daylight.

Throughout the training sessions, including a four-day, three-night excursion into the woods, I was impressed by the knowledge and skills of most of the cadets. Three of the young men helped me practice knot tying to the point where I was confident of passing the practical test. Of course, there was the usual one chap who thought he knew it all, until he was asked to put the knowledge to practical use. With the caliber of the majority of the young men and women in CAP, I think we will be in good hands as they begin taking leadership positions.

Frank Tucker is relaxing at "Camp One" this week.

Jim and Evelyn Kenney have returned from a two-week stay at their Parrsville, Nova Scotia home.

The baby loon is thriving under Mama Loon's vigilant care. Buster Williamson saw another baby loon up lake. It was smaller than a tennis ball but fluffer.

Ellen Cox Price and family are enjoying a vacation at the Cox family camp on the lake.

Roger Lavallee has a new dog. Roger says it's much cheaper than supporting a woman.

Jennifer Casey and her two girls have returned from visiting grandparents in Wisconsin.

The Yard and Bake Sale at the Ladies Aid was quite a success. Visitors from Andover, Colebrook, Newry, Bethel and Magalloway went home with sacks full of goodies. The members contributed baked goods and fudges. They are to be commended for the hard work involved.

Several people in Errol and Upton stayed awake to watch the remarkable rescue of the nine miners in Pennsylvania. Dick Pinnette on Akers Pond told us of a volley of fireworks as the rescue was completed. It was a fitting tribute to the miners and their rescuers.

Sue Angevine was visited by her brother recently. He arrived in a baby blue Corvette that dazzled the Janet Vogt, Becky Kendall and yours truly visited the Isle of Shoals last Wednesday. The McLaughlin Garden Foundation sponsored the tour, which also included viewing old homes and gardens in Portsmouth, N.H. After returning home we found that the tour boat that we sailed on had a fire in the engine on the trip following ours.

we all gathered on the back lawn and had a disposal of old worn out, tattered flags. There were appropriate readings by Lesley and Eleanor. This was good to take care of them in a rightful manner. Afterward, the meeting was opened by the tent president, Gail Butterfield, (glad to have you back, Gail). Secretary and treasurer's reports were read and accepted. Discussion was held about the upcoming inspection supper meeting, which is scheduled for Sept. 25 at the K of P Hall here in Stoneham. An amusing poem was read by Marilyn Jones, which members enjoyed. Lesley Dean won the mystery prize. Meeting was adjourned until the next one, which will be at the K of P Hall on Aug. 20.

From the Bethel Rotary Club

This week in Rotary, we learned about the Maine Career Advantage program — Connecting Maine Students with Maine Businesses. The program is affiliated with the state's technical school system. Steve Palmer, business developer, educated us on the program. Joe Roop, business developer, and Carrie Mrowka, student services liaison, were also in attendance from the program.

The program is a flexible internship design available in such segments as one- or two-year internships or semester(s) or summer internships. The internship is a supervised training experience; it's highly structured and designed to give the student a solid foundation of professional skills and knowledge. The students are between the ages of 16 and 24 attending either a Maine public high school or technical college.

John Demkoski from East Kingston, N.H., scored a hole in one in the first round of the New England Couples' Championship held at The Bethel Inn and Country Club. For this once-in-a-lifetime shot, John wins a getaway vacation sponsored by Crown Marketing.

Maine Career Advantage (MCA) is the direct employer. Businesses are billed by MCA and that fee covers the student pay and associated payroll administration and insurance costs. Internships are offered, for example, in such areas as accounting services, electrical technology, hospitality, and telecommunications technology.

This program is an investment in the future. It supplements what schools alone cannot give our youth. Businesses enhance their education with solid training and mentoring.

This program began about 10 years ago based on a German apprenticeship program witnessed by John Fitzsimmons and John McKernon. The MCA program has had 1,253 students go through an internship program to date and have found that 70 percent of the students stay in the career path of their internship. For more information on the MCA program, visit their Web site at www.mainecareeradvantage.org.

Continuing series: Polio Eradication — Fulfilling Our Promise. Since 1985, when Rotary's polio immunization program began, great strides have been made and significant achievements have come about thanks to our PolioPlus effort. Rotary International (RI) started a funding campaign that brought in $247 million in contributions in 1988. Since 1988, thanks to the joint endeavor of the partnership formed by WHO, CDC, UNICEF, and RI, some 2.5 billion children worldwide have been vaccinated against polio. From the inception of the PolioPlus program through the end of 2001, the number of polio-endemic countries has decreased from 125 to 10. Today, polio is endemic in only 10 countries. Only 10.

Inside Rotary: Nice to see all visiting Rotarians and guests. Welcome summer regulars. Okay guys — it's a five and a one.

Upcoming programs include Life History by Peggy Mooers and Club Assembly.

Happy August Birthday to Dawn Cook, Jim Mann, Rene McGrew, Rick Mowery, and Jane Ryerson.

The Rotary Club of Bethel meets Tuesdays at 7:30 a.m. at The Bethel Inn and Country Club.

Our own meeting included a reminder from Sister Hosterman that Deaf Activities is now Family Health Activities. There was much discussion of plans for exhibiting at Oxford Country and Fryeburg fairs. Isn't it amazing that fair season is nearly upon us already.

Since our 55-year members felt that attending a reception would be difficult for them, we voted to send a letter of congratulations to each, along with the certificate.

Anyone planning to visit with us in August should be aware that on the 22nd we will meet at the hall at 5 p.m. for business followed immediately by our annual cookout.

Maine Veterans' Home*

Thirty-five World War II veterans were presented commemorative walking sticks on Saturday, July 20, at the Maine Veterans' Home in South Paris. The presentation was made possible by the joint efforts of Galen Cole and Peavey Manufacturing of Eddington. Mr. Cole, a WWII veteran and founder of the Cole Land Transportation Museum, instituted a walking stick program for all WWII veterans. Patricia Young, administrator of the 90-bed facility, addressed the veterans, families and guests at the ceremony. "We find it a great privilege to be able to honor our WWII veterans here in South Paris. They are a deserving group and we are fortunate for their sacrifices. Our sincere thanks go to Mr. Galen Cole for instituting this wonderful program."
